Major-General O. O. Howard at East Orange, July 3, 1904.

the direct word of God. He is now seventy-three and two-thirds years old, a very well preserved man. He is apparently about five feet eleven inches in height, and perhaps of one hundred and seventy pounds in weight. His hair is entirely white, but his head is not bald. His side-whiskers and moustache are carefully trimmed, and sprinkled with darker shades of gray. His forehead is open, broad, and of good height; his eye is clear, intelligent, penetrating, firm; nose shapely and strong; mouth expressive, firm, delicate, benevolent; cheeks somewhat furrowed, but sensitive and radiant; chin round, symmetrical, resolute, firm; shoulders broad, even, firm. The maimed right arm naturally attracts most attention. His civilian suit of black is of course faultless. The empty sleeve is fastened forward to a coat button, midway up the breast, just against the gold bar across the vest, and the modest wreathen gold chain watch-guard. Altogether his is a handsome as well as strong and venerable face, and his a manly, erect and comely form. His manner when he speaks is entirely unconventional, unpretentious, able and free. There is no p sing as an historic character; no assumption of greatness; no claim and no refusal of honor. As the leader of the meeting, in aptly introducing him, briefly recounted some of his public services, and noted the honor conferred by his presence, he seemed simply to allow him to say what he would, and gave no further attention to it. Of course a good many old soldiers were present, and he appeared to care especially for them—that if any of them were not right religiously, they might become so. There did not seem to be a particle of cant in what he said or in his manner of saying it. He showed no bitterness or censure of any, but love for all. He used the word "comrades" a number of times, and said that "old comrades who had campaigned together in active service seemed a little nearer to one another than any others in this world, and would," he supposed, "still they were in some higher state of existence." He gave many instances of father-love in men who had lost their sons in the Civil War on both sides. These were very pathetic. He spoke also of the mother-love, which would endure everything for her children. He alluded to David's love for Absolom. "And comrades," he said, "you know I have recently lost my own son at the front in the Philippines. And yet should I complain because he died so early? He was eleven years older than our Saviour when He died for us. And after all, comrades, that is the best of all times and places to die—in the path of duty, and at the front." He told how the brave Gen. Geary trembled over the dead body of his son, who was killed near his cannon. It was very affecting, and Gen. Howard himself was deeply moved as he thus presented the Fatherhood of God. Many were in tears, but there was nothing weak about it all. But what, he asked, about the wrath of God? Do not the Scriptures speak of God as angry with the wicked? Did not our Saviour Himself foretell future judgment and penalty? He said he had looked from version to version to find exemption from the future eternal punishment of the incorrigibly wicked, but he could not find it. Reason, Conscience and Revelation, he said, all alike taught that the wrath of God must abide upon the impenitent. Therefore he entreated all to repent, believe and be saved. After the service perhaps a thousand persons, including many children, took the General's hand, to all of whom he spoke with the greatest kindness and cordiality. There was nothing partisan in what he said. He related that he had just met President Roosevelt on the battlefield of Gettysburg, where he and Gen. Daniel E. Sickles were present, the only surviving corps commanders who participated in the battle. He spoke kindly of the Confederates in recognition of their bravery and fidelity to their adopted cause.

However history may judge of the military ability of Gen. O. O. Howard, the value of his services and the brilliancy in general of his public career, his conspicuity as a general has doubtless been obscured by his prominence as a philanthropist, educator and evangelist. This does not seem to trouble him at all. In alluding last Sunday to something—perhaps service for the weak and poor, which some might fear would "stain their escutcheon"—he said, "Let the escutcheon take care of itself." Indeed, for a simple, manly, earnest, tender Christian address, without pretence and without demonstration, that open-air talk to a large concourse in the East Orange park could hardly have been exceeded. His left, his only, hand was sometimes thrust into his trousers pockets, but often raised in animated gesture as he presented the love of God to His earthly children. And at such times his whole person seemed to join in the joyous and eager appeal. Most touching, and even thrilling, was it to see so much of the other arm, the right arm, as had not been left at Fair Oaks, from the shoulder half-way down to the elbow, beating in sympathy with the whole arm against the upper-half of the empty sleeve, and seeming to add its almost suppressed emphasis to the glowing appeal.

This sketch is not intended as a eulogy of Gen. Howard. He does not need it; but if he did, no mere eulogy ever made one hair either black or white. But it is intended to show that no human being, however conspicuous in public life, however illustrious in peace or in war, for authorship or statesmanship, in achievement, or in fame of any kind, need be debarred from the unspeakable privilege and the immeasurable honor of speaking, out of a full heart, in the utmost simplicity, for God, for Christ, and for souls. We shall be here on earth but for a short time. The path of glory, as well as all others, lead but to the grave. Washington, Lincoln and Webster would not have been less, but greater, if they had, when opportunity was offered, warned men with tears, as Gen. Howard did last Sunday, to be reconciled to God. Such things will become more common hereafter. The kings of the earth bring their glory and honor into it. It was something to see the man who led a corps at Antietam, and who chose the battlefield of Gettysburg, standing under the stars and stripes of a large flag, after forty years, preaching to lost men Christ and Him crucified. Undoubtedly Gen. Howard was in prayer, as every Christian would be on such an occasion, when he selected Gettysburg. Undoubtedly he was guided, as every Christian is who seeks guidance. The talents and achievements of Gen. O. O. Howard are not to be underrated. It is obvious that it was no inferior young man who was spontaneously intrusted by the government, and by his superior officers, with commands of such momentous importance at Antietam, at Chancellorsville, at Gettysburg, at Lookout Mountain, at Missionary Ridge, and over the right wing of the army that marched from Atlanta to the sea—the man whom Abraham Lincoln selected from the whole army to cope with one of the most difficult questions, the care of the freedmen, that ever confronted a nation. But as a simple Christian he, as well as every regenerate person, is called to something higher than any earthly authority can confer. As we saw him last Sunday he was to the full, every inch, a Major General, and yet something higher and better, an obedient servant of Jesus Christ. In the hospital, in the inquiry meeting, for the freedmen, for the Indians, he has done something for Christ. Without assumption, and without complaint or censure of others, he has done what his own hand found to do.

Beautiful Venice.

F. Hopkinson Smith, author of "Col. Carter of Cartersville," visited beautiful Venice in Madison Square Garden the other evening and between the acts talked with Conductor Duss in the green room.

The creator of Col. Carter and Caleb West is the authority on Venetian art in this country and in speaking with Mr. Duss Mr. Smith said: "As I got in one of your gondolas while it drifted lazily down towards the home of Desdemona, with St. Mark's Cathedral and the Campanile in the distance, I was back in Venice by the Adriatic, for it all seemed so real.

"In the most minute detail you have preserved the very atmosphere of Venice, Mr. Duss, and such an achievement were it done in Paris, would simply pack the largest building there every night for a year."

That Venice has "caught on" with the public is shown by the great crowds that fill the Garden each evening. The eighth big week is on and not a sign yet of the ebb tide of favor.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials

NOTICE.

The following petition has been received by the Town Council of the Town of Bloomfield:

To the Town Council of the Town of Bloomfield, in the County of Essex:

The undersigned subscribers, owners of one-sixth of the lands fronting on a section on the north side of Watsessing avenue, between a point therein opposite to Arlington avenue, and the easterly side of the Lackawanna Railroad, respectfully petition your honorable body to construct a street gutter four feet wide, with cobble stones, on the outside of the sidewalk along the said north side of Watsessing avenue from a point on the north side of said avenue which would be in line with the easterly line of Arlington avenue, if extended, to the easterly side of the Lackawanna Railroad. And that the sidewalk on the said north side of Watsessing avenue from the westerly side of Elia street to the said easterly side of the Lackawanna Railroad be flagged in the customary width and thickness of flagstone laid by the Council in flag sidewalk paving.
